

2011 Labor Day Tweet-a-Thon Reaches Millions to Promote & Celebrate the Value of Unions

Over the Labor Day weekend, American Rights at Work teamed up with the MLBPA, the NFLPA, and the country's leading entertainment unions, Actors' Equity, AFTRA, SAG, and WGAE for its second annual Labor Day Tweet-a-Thon. In 140 characters or less, high-profile tweeters came together with other union members and workers' rights supporters from across the country to celebrate the role unions play in creating fair workplaces—and a fair economy. Participants using the #unionmember hash-tag ranged from rank and file union members to celebrities and sports stars—all proud to be tweeting their #unionmember pride on Labor Day.

More than 5,000 tweets were sent by union members and their supporters throughout the weekend about what it means to be a #unionmember on the field, the set, or the factory floor—creating 13.5 million impressions on millions of Twitter users. By the end of the holiday, 5.4 million people saw tweets about the advantages of being a #unionmember.

Check out some of the high profile union members who participated and tweeted below:
